New Jersey Uber and Lyft Services to Be Impacted by Sami's Law

As reported in the New Jersey Record on June 20, "Ride-sharing services like Uber and Lyft operating in New Jersey must start identifying vehicles with signs and require drivers to carry barcode ID cards, under the new safety law prompted by the killing of a student who mistakenly got in the wrong car.

"On Thursday (June 20, 2019) Governor Phil Murphy signed what sponsors called Sami's Law, named for Samantha Josephson, a New Jersey woman studying at the University of South Carolina who was killed after she got into a car she thought was an Uber."

"The new law," the New Jersey Record continues, "requires ride-sharing companies such as Lyft and Uber to provide reflective or illuminated signs in the front and rear windows of the vehicle when the driver is logged into the company's digital network.

"Ride-sharing companies are also required to provide every driver with two copies of a barcode or 'machine-readable' code unique to that driver and vehicle. The code must be scanned to confirm the driver's identity and must be displayed on the driver's- and passenger's-side rear windows while the driver is logged into the company's digital network."
